The lady addressing the Harbor Commission mentioned what fun it was in her youth to go to the Fun Factory. My hope is that this commission and our consultants consider bringing back a new and transformed version of a light, bright game space to replace the Fun Factory.

I accidentally became aware of some serendipitous ideas that could make a wonderful place for kids of all ages to play.

I'd like to share ideas if the City decides to go in this direction.

Just a thought... my young adult grandchildren headed over to Hermosa Pier Avenue the other week to play pool. They told me it's very popular. We talked about our waterfront adding a pool parlor, if that is the case. The only problem I saw was that the place they go to serves alcohol, so my older teen had to stay back with us oldie's because he was too young, still. The rest are at least 22.

I just see we have an abundance of alcohol serving places at our waterfront already.
